

ABSTRACT

A method is provided in which subscribers of a communication system who travel outside their home areas can receive marketing and/or advertising information while their cellular phones are idle but activated. The content or subject matter of the promotional information depends on the current location of the subscriber and the history of that subscriber in that location.